

delivered over the body of Lady Thibonno, who had called the waiter and chambermaid to witness that the features of the dead lady exactly resembled those of the Countess. At this point of the evidence all eyes in court were turned full upon the witness, it being suggested on behalf of the defence that there is a marked resemblance between himself and the Countess. With reference to the "infernal machine," as "family likeness" no questions were asked, and Mr. Seymour left the box after an examination of about four hours, in the course of which he had been told that the Countess had intended him for an "adverse witness" as obviously as she had oversteered Dr. K. nearly for a cross-examination.

"INFERNAL MACHINES."

Since the chief paragraph under the above heading, which appeared in the Times of the 9th July, as taken from the Spectator of the previous Saturday, may prove of far greater importance than would at first sight seem probable, and the fact that the "infernal machine" is not only a "family likeness" but a "family likeness" is a fact of no small importance.

"To be forewarned is to be forearmed," and as there are no means so effectual by which a timely warning may be conveyed to every eye of the public as the Spectator of the 9th July, I trust you will allow me to trespass on your columns in the interests of humanity, as well as for the possible prevention of fraud and widespread misery and ruin.

I am indeed a person who has recently come from some circumstances which have recently come to my own knowledge in my official capacity as Consul in London, for the Republic of Venezuela, which appears to have been set on as the scene of one of the most atrocious and heinous crimes, Admiral Putnam, lately French Minister of Marine, has thought it of sufficient importance to issue a circular to those whom it may interest, and singularly, my little history is drawn from one of the principal ports in France.

On the 16th of April a gentleman called on me at the Consulate, saying that he had some information to impart which was of great importance to Venezuela. My first impression was that he had come here for which he expected to be paid, but such did not prove to be the case, and I hereby tender him my public acknowledgments.

He told me his story, which appeared to me so singular that I asked him if he would object to put the principal facts upon paper, which he kindly did, and from his statement I condense the following:

He stated that a sailing vessel had then left, or was on the eve of leaving, a port in France for one of the principal ports in Venezuela, the name of which he gave me, but which for obvious reasons I had reason to believe was the name of the person named in the translation. A native of France, but who had been for some years previous to the last 10 or 15 months resident in Venezuela, was said to have sailed in the vessel, but with him a number of "infernal machines," expressly adapted to the secret destruction of steamships.

Fortunately, I received this information on the day of the West India mail steamer sailing, and I had reason to believe that the vessel was direct to the authorities at the Venezuelan port in question, and also the name to the Government at Caracas. I was subsequently shown one of the machines themselves, which exactly corresponded to the description given in the Spectator, being about 3 ft. by 4 ft., with the exact appearance of an ordinary piece of coal. I was told that some were made considerably larger, even to the size of a man's head, but always resembling coal, the reason of which is obvious.

Nearly a month later I had another visit from the same person, who told me that he had recently learned that there were some persons in the Venezuelan port who were interested in some merchant steamers, and that they were preparing for a gigantic fraud. The plan proposed was to load one of these steamers with goods of all kinds, and then put some of these machines on board, and send her to sea, very heavily insured, in the hope that she might be lost, and they would gain a very large sum.

On this second occasion my informant showed me a note, received by him from the Secretary of one of the Departments of Her Majesty's Government, which proved that they had not thought it unworthy of their attention. So long as I had reason to believe that the intended fraud was confined to Venezuela, I felt that my duty only required that I should keep my Government and the other authorities thoroughly informed of all that came to my knowledge, but with this assurance to be no longer any doubt that it has very widely spread ramifications, I feel it to be a duty to me to the world in general, to make the above as public as possible, for which purpose I solicit your invaluable co-operation and assistance.

Your obedient servant,
FREDERICK H. HENNING, Consul,
Consulate of Venezuela, 15, Moorgate-street.

See how wonderful are the ways of nature in Illinois. A pair of boots costs just two loads of potatoes, and the potatoes just wear out two pairs of boots.

It is announced from Madrid that the Governor of Cuba has notified to the Government that the order of March 24th, directing that eight to ten thousand slaves should be emancipated, has been carried out.

Over in Tezotzon, Oahu, recently, a girl backed out of her marriage engagement when the minister got to the house. The bridegroom was of the broken-hearted kind. He turned to the assembled ladies and said: "If there's any other girl here that'll occupy this vacant situation, I'm here." Up jumped a sister of the bride who had declined to be a bride, saying, "Come in, friend, and let us see what you can do for the performance. I will reward the ceremony was performed to the delight of the groom and company.

It is stated that by a careful analysis it has been found that the potato contains a large amount of phosphorus, or brain food, than any other fruit or vegetable, and on this account they are very important to sedentary men who work with their brain rather than their muscles. They also contain a large amount of sugar, and every day, especially for sedentary men, the action of whose liver is sluggish, to eliminate effluvia, which, if retained in the system, produce indigestion of the brain, and, indeed, of the whole system, also lead to leprosy, scurvy, and troublesome diseases of the skin.

Preserving the Lungs.—Cotton is much better as a dust-catcher than sponge, being much finer. Professor Tyndall has recently made experiments in preserving air by passing it through tubes filled with cotton, and succeeded in making air so dustless that the microscope, aided by the strongest sunlight, could not detect the least dust particle in it. In order to use dust in the preservation of the lungs, it would be best to provide the apparatus to be placed before the mouth with two valves, so as to give the expired air another channel of exit without passing it through the cotton.—Western Budget.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.—The Honorable papers relate that during the day of the Prince of Wales at Perth he received a letter from the widow of an English nobleman who had perished in the late railway crash on the Great Western in that city. The poor woman stated that she could barely earn enough money to live, and that, being desirous of seeing her sister in England and that her husband had died, she hoped the Prince would not refuse to obtain for her a free passage. The Prince immediately sent the widow thirty pounds, and informed her that she would do more for her on her arrival in England.—Western Budget.

CHEAP MOSQUITO NET.—There is a cheap mosquito net in vogue among the plantation hands and boatmen in some parts of the South which answers every purpose to the letter—it is common coal net, and it is then exposed and dropped out as dry as possible; after which the cotton is rubbed over the face and hands. The mosquito will alight where the scent has been left, it will then expose itself to the light of the net, and then exposed myself to clouds of them on various occasions, without experiencing the least annoyance. Thousands of these would cover him in an inch of any face, and sting by the hour, but none dare touch.—Western Budget.

His own man in modern times lived more than one hundred years. Every reader will at once declare in the affirmative, having in his mind many instances of people he had known as well as others he had read of, who had been universally accepted as centenarians. Yet, however long they lived, they were not so long-lived as the ancients, having in their mind many instances of people he had known as well as others he had read of, who had been universally accepted as centenarians. UNFINISHED STILL.

A baby's foot, and a piece of wool.
Faded and soiled and soft;
Old things, you say, and I doubt you're right,
For a century's nest this story might
Up in the garret lie.

Moan like its fall, but, meta, look here:
When first I went to bed,
A woman alone on your face and hand,
With a wedding-ring on the small soft hand
Which clung so close to me.

My wife—God bless her! The day before,
She sat beside my feet;
And the sunlight kissed her yellow hair,
And the daisy fingers, deft and fair,
Knitted a baby's boot.

The voyage was over; I came ashore;
What, then, you found, I thought?
A grave the daisies had entwined white,
A cottage empty and dark as night,
And this beside the chair.

The little boy, I was unfeigned still;
The knitted boot lay near;
But the knitter had gone away to rest,
With the white dove of peace on her breast,
Down in the chimney-gate way.

PARASITES IN ANCIENT COMIC DRAMA.

We are told that whenever King Philip ate anything out of acid, and more virulent than his flatterers, Cleopatra went through exactly the same grimaces; when the king put his leg, Cleopatra immediately put on a limp; and when the king lost his right eye in the arrow at Methone, the courtier appeared next morning with the same eye bandaged up. It is also said that to wear the head a little on one side became quite the fashion in the court of Alexander, because he himself had a slight deformity of the head. Another variety of the parasite was the still more humble companion, who carried messages and did little services of all kinds, sometimes worse than menial, for his richer patron. An amusing allusion of one of these hungry guests who are waiting for his dinner (having possibly found no entertainer, and therefore no dinner at all, the day before) has been preserved for us by Julius Gallus out of a lost comedy which he attributes to Plautus—"The Baccant"—founded upon one of the same name by Menander.

"The gods confound the man who first invented
This measuring time by hours! Confound him too,
Who first set up a maid—ditch—chopping up
My day into these miserable bits of time!
When I was young I had no such bad appetite.
The very best and choicest of all things;
When that and 'eat, I ate—I could get it;
But now, even when I've the chance to eat,
I must stop."

Unless the sun be willing! for the town
Is grown so full of those same cursed dials,
That more than half the people stare at them.
These persons are represented, of course, as having not only the habit of living as far as possible at other men's expense, but as bringing an insatiable appetite with them to their entertainers' table.

"The not to gather strength he eats, but wishes
To grow stronger than he may eat the more."
—From the "Ancient Classics" Series, by the

A VARIETY OF NORTH-AMERICAN INDIANS.

These coast Indians are very avaricious in the acquisition of property, blankets being the standard of riches. They are very fond of horses among the interior tribes. Though muskies, canoes, &c., are all carefully collected, yet most of these articles owe their acquisition to blankets, and an Indian, in describing the wealth of another, will indicate this by telling how many peesies (or blankets) he has. This hoarding up of blankets is the enervating passion of these people in time of peace, and the exciting cause of their wars is their desire of obtaining prisoners as slaves, by the sale of whom, or by whose labour, they may add to their hoard. I have often commiserated a poor looking man lounging about, his only covering a threadbare, tattered blanket, and on inquiry would be surprised to learn that he was one of the wealthiest men in the tribe, and had several hundred new blankets stored up in his right house, of native manufacture, in his house. I was once forced to a "great chief," because, I had only one pair of "Mackinaw" blankets in my canoe, when hunting at a village of Indians who had little intercourse with the whites, and were accordingly in a primitive condition. To obtain these blankets, there was no use of self-denial at which the coast fishermen will hesitate. I might almost say to crime, which will deliver him if he sees blankets likely to be the result of it. The end of all this scraping and hoarding is to give away the property again at some potlatch, at which in a few hours the labour of years will be dissipated. These feasts are given by the chief men as a sort of peace-offering to more powerful ones; but most frequently they are looked upon in the light of gratifying the vanity of the giver and of adding to his personal consequence. His wives sound far and near. He accordingly assumes a sort of parvenu rank in the tribe, very different, however, from the hereditary aristocracy already referred to. The chiefs are under the necessity of frequently giving these potlatches in order to preserve their popularity, just as the old knights used to scatter largess to their followers; and accordingly we generally find these dignitaries about the poorest men in the tribe. —From "The Races of Mankind."

THE HUMORS OF MOVING.

The first Sunday in the new house is a notable day. There is an entire absence of old landmarks, and a strange, weird newness on everything, and you can't find your shaving-soup. You start for a bottle of oil, but you don't see the scuttle. It is in the bottom of a barrel in the garret. You take the dripping pan. When you change your shirt, you look for it first. One of the bureau drawers, which are piled one upon another in the parlor, and you find you have got to lift a half ton of carpets and feather beds before you can get down to the drawers. After you have lifted them down and searched them through, it is remembered by your wife that the desired garment is in one of the barrels; the one in the shed, she thinks, although it may be the coat in the closet, and yet it would be just like the stupid carman to have carried that barrel down cellar. You think so, too. You attack one of those barrels, and are surprised at the result. A bad-gilt comes out first, then a pie-in, next a piece of cold ham, neatly done up in your vest and packed away in the missing scuttle. Below is an assortment of ironware and a length of stove-pipe, a half dozen of handkerchiefs of towels, and a rolling pin. You begin to accept you will eventually come upon a coal mine, and perhaps some dead friend. Then you go down in that barrel again, and come up with a pleasing assortment of stockings and half-completed medicine bottles. The way you come up this time leads you to consider the barrel itself. It has caught in the back of your vest, and made the cloth lie flat. It took off one-half of one of your hands as it lay on the back of your hand as if a lion's head had raged there. It is quite evident the cooper who built that barrel was called away before he commenced to roll the pin and look around as if you had expected to see him. Then you call the girl to repeat the barrel, and start up stairs to look after something that is easier to find, but finally change your mind, and pass the balance of the day in digging carpet tacks and worthless wood from the palms of your feet, and concealing lies about the wealth of your uncle; and the moon looks through the window at night and tows up with a glow of burnished silver several lengths of stove-

MARRIAGE RITES AMONG THE GREEKS.

The ceremony of marriage among the Greeks comprises three acts, as follows:—

"In the maternal house, the lover being present, the father, usually surrounded by his family, offers a sacrifice. This done, he declares, pronouncing a sacramental formula, that he gives his daughter to the young man. This declaration is absolutely indispensable. The young girl could not go at once to her part in the worship of her husband's house, unless the father had previously released her from the paternal home. In order to enter into her new religion, she must be freed from every tie, and from association with her former religion.

"The young girl is taken to her husband's house. Sometimes the husband himself conducts her. In some towns the office of escorting her is assigned to one of those who, among the Greeks, were invested with a priestly character, and were called heralds. Usually the maiden is placed on a chariot; her face is covered by a veil, and a crown is on her head. The crown we shall observe here, was used in all religious ceremonies. Her dress is white. A torch is borne before her; it is the symbol of truth. As the procession moves, a religious hymn is sung, with the refrain O soma, O soma. This is called the marriage hymn, and its importance was so great that its name was given to the whole ceremony.

"The young girl does not go of herself into her new home. The husband must take her—simulating a forcible seizure; she must cry out, and the attendant women must feign to defend her. What is the significance of this ceremony? It is a symbol of the young girl's chastity. That is not very likely; the wedding in the house will be a religious ceremony. Does it not rather mean that the woman who is going to worship in the house of her husband, no right there, that she does not come thither of her own will, and that the master of the place and of the household gods must introduce her by an exercise of his own might? However this may be, a pretended struggle, the husband lifts her in his arms, and bears her over the threshold, taking care that her feet do not touch it.

"They approach the hearth, and the wife is placed in the presence of the household divinity. She is bathed with water; she touches the sacred fire. Prayers are offered. Then the husband and wife eat together a cake or piece of bread." —La Cité Antique, by F. de Coulanges.
